Africa has a greater reliance on aeronautical income than any other region and this has become a major issue because airport charges alone can’t cover the capital costs for infrastructure development. Commercial revenues can play a vital role in the transformation of African airports and border markets.

According to the study conducted by Airport Council International (ACI), 41% of global airport revenues come from commercial sources.
Most airport authorities in Africa charge high fees and taxes which increases the cost of flights and travel within the region. Undoubtedly so, the commercial side of the airport business; travel and duty-free retail can offer the much-needed revenues and cushion. Sources of income such as retail concessions can contribute significantly to the diversification from aeronautic revenues in an airport’s income portfolios.
